

America the Great

Melting Pot?:

Carpatho-Rusyns and the Struggle for Americanization

We are taught that various immigrants who arrived in the United States all came together in a "melting pot" to become American and live harmoniously. The story of one group, the Carpatho-Rusyns, demonstrates that immigrant groups often clashed with each other and did not easily blend together in the American melting pot. As the Carpatho-Rusyn story demonstrates, the American immigrant story is often one of conflict more than cooperation.

Discover the story at: www.andrewhutsko.org